Thinking about your future and what you might need to do to get there isn't something that happens only at school or college. In fact, some of the biggest influences on the decisions you will make exist outside of school such as friends and family, social media, hobbies and interests. So you need to think more about what goes on in your world and the people you spend time with; and think about how it might help you to think about your future.

If you're at home during the UK school closures, it's the perfect opportunity to spend some time thinking about this. To help, we've created a series of activities to guide you through some of the important areas of careers thinking and planning! These include:

- Selling yourself - the importance of a personal brand
- Learning from the jobs people in your family have done
- Understanding the importance of technology and how it's changing the workplace

Some of the activities are quick, whilst others might require you to do a bit of investigation. We'll keep adding new activities all the time - so visit us regularly.

Home Learning Activities

Here you'll find a series of activities to help you to continue your career learning at home. They'll help you to stay focused on what's important when thinking about your future, including what opportunities are out there, how to get there and how you'll need to prepare yourself for the journey.

Set yourself a target to complete all the activities - maybe do one each day. We'll keep adding new activities, so check back regularly.

At the end of every activity we'll suggest other ways to explore Start so you can continue to build your profile and explore your future!
